Cover letter

Dear Professor XXXXX,

In this paper, I discussed blogs mainly hunting blogs like Big Deer with Mike Hanback, Bowhunter.com, and The Big Game Hunting Blog. I also broke down what blogs were and what they need to be a good blog that flows well and is pleasing to the eye. I listed the things that were needed for those blogs such as list, pictures, symbols, and videos.

This paper was easy for me to complete because I got to choose my topic and I choose something that I love, hunting. Peer review helped me out a lot because it helped me realise my mistakes as well as what I did good. I messed up on grammar, length, and I also went in to more depth about my topic. You also helped me figure out that I needed to go into more depth as well as make my conclusion a little bit stronger. I added a few sentences to help with those topics and to go into more depth.

Sincerely,

Analyzing a Hunting Blog

Blogs are social media posts that have pictures and go into a lot of depth in their writing as well as their explanations and how to do things like cooking, meditating, traveling, hunting, and many other things. Blogs are a way that people show their lifestyle and how they do those things in their life. Hunting blogs are blogs because of the list, guides, pictures, videos, and explanations that experienced hunters put into them. The reason why the hunters write these blogs is to help other hunters or people that want to hunt with their questions about specific topics.

A blog is a regularly updated website or webpage, typically run by an individual or small group, written in an informational or conversational style. Blogs use pictures, videos, writing, and symbols to attract attention, help people navigate, and help get the writer's point across. Hunting blogs use the same aspects as regular blogs. Some examples of hunting blogs that use these aspects are Big Deer with Mike Hanback, Bowhunting.com, The Big Game Hunting Blog, and many more.

Big Deer with Mike Hanback uses pictures, lists, guides, and videos to help hunters that have questions answer those questions. Hanbacks pictures, guides, list, and videos also help to navigate the website. For example, Hanback uses a picture of a trail camera to help people that are looking for trail camera help, and navigate to trail camera help. Bowhunting.com does the same thing in that they use pictures and writing to help people find things like their section on what you should do after you shoot a deer. The Big Game Hunting Blog uses writing and symbols more because their website is ammunition and gun focused which means all of their pictures would look similar, an example of this is how they say “The best 300 Win Mag Rifles for Hunting- Ultimate Guide” and have a gun symbol next to it showing that it involves a gun instead of ammunition. Each topic gives you about eight paragraphs of knowledge.

How these three different blogs differ improves the outcome of what they are trying to tell people. This is because in the Big Deer blog Hanback uses pictures. After all, his topics differ throughout his blog. In Bowhunting.com they use more in-depth pictures because all of their topics are about how to hunt deer for example they use a picture of a food plot and then a picture of a deer feeder which is what you put in the middle of your food plot. The reason why they do it that way is that the section with the food plot picture they explain how to set up your food plot and in the unit with the deer feeder they explain what's the best place to put it in the food plot and what the best food is for big bucks. The Big Game Hunting Blogs use symbols and writing because they are very in-depth about the type of ammunition and gun to use to get the best outcome for the many different hunting situations.

Hunting blogs help many hunters all over the world almost every day. The way that hunting blogs are set up can help the hunter out a lot because no one wants to be reading off-topic when they want to learn how to get a hunting task done and done before hunting season. Pictures, videos, symbols, and writing styles in blogs help with that. Blogs can help many people if they are set up the correct way and flow well. Blogs play a key role in peoples lives and help them tremendously.
